IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

Renee Elizabeth Agnew-Currie,

Plaintiff,

vs.

Michael J. Astrue,

Defendant.

No. CV 11-1953-PHX-JAT

ORDER

Background

Plaintiff appeals from Defendant's denial of her claim for social security disability benefits. Defendant, upon review of the record, concedes that this Court should remand this case to the agency. The dispute between the parties arises over whether this Court should remand for an immediate award of benefits or for further proceedings to develop the record to determine whether Plaintiff is entitled to benefits. More specifically, Defendant concedes that the Administrative Law Judge ("ALJ") who presided over Plaintiff's hearing and issued a decision did not properly address certain medical professionals' testimony.

ALJ's evaluation of medical testimony

The ALJ can reject the opinion of a treating physician in favor of the conflicting opinion of another examining physician "if the ALJ makes 'findings setting forth specific, legitimate reasons for doing so that are based on substantial evidence in the record.' " Thomas v. Barnhart, 278 F.3d 947, 957 (9th Cir. 2002) (quoting Magallanes v. Bowen, 881

1 F.2d 747, 751 (9th Cir.1989)). Here, Defendant concedes that the ALJ did not give specific 2 and legitimate reasons for not relying on the testimony of Dr. DeJesus, Dr. Lanier, Nurse 3 Henderson, or Dr. Mason.

4 Parties' positions

5 Plaintiff argues that given the Defendant's concession, this Court should credit-as-true 6 the testimony of these medical providers. Plaintiff then concludes that after crediting these 7 opinions as true, this Court should remand for an award of benefits.

8 Defendant argues that under Strauss v. Comm'r of Soc. Sec. Admin., 635 F.3d 1135, 9 1137 (9th Cir. 2011), this Court can remand for an award of benefits only when the record 10 shows the claimant is in fact disabled as defined by the statute. Defendant says this result 11 is mandated "no matter how egregious the ALJ's errors may be." Id. The bottom line of this 12 argument is that this Court cannot award disability benefits to a non-disabled person as a 13 sanction against Defendant for the ALJ not writing a thorough opinion. Thus, Defendant 14 argues this Court should remand for the ALJ to properly consider and analyze the evidence 15 and make a new determination regarding entitlement to benefits.

16 State of the Law

17 This Court has the discretion to remand this case for the ALJ to further develop the 18 record or to award benefits to Plaintiff. Reddick v. Chater, 157 F.3d 715, 728 (9th Cir.
19 1998); Swenson v. Sullivan, 876 F.2d 683, 689 (9th Cir. 1989). The Ninth Circuit Court of 20 Appeals ("Ninth Circuit") has provided guidance for the appropriate exercise of the award 21 of benefits discretion. Harman v. Apfel, 211 F.3d 1172, 1178 (9th Cir. 2000). According to 22 the Ninth Circuit, evidence should be credited and an action remanded for the immediate 23 award of benefits when the following three factors are satisfied:

24 (1) the ALJ has failed to provide legally sufficient reasons for rejecting such 25 evidence, (2) there are no outstanding issues that must be resolved before a 26 determination of disability can be made, and (3) it is clear from the record that the ALJ would be required to find the claimant disabled were such evidence credited.

27 Id. (quoting Smolen v. Chater, 80 F.3d 1273, 1292 (9th Cir. 1996)).

1 In applying factors two and three above, the Ninth Circuit has adopted the “credit-as-2 true” rule. “Where the [ALJ] fails to provide adequate reasons for rejecting the opinion of 3 a treating or examining physician, we credit that opinion as a matter of law.” Lester v 4 Chater, 81 F.3d 821, 834 (9th Cir. 1995) (internal quotations omitted). In clarifying what 5 credit-as-true means, the Ninth Circuit adopted the same test for medical testimony it had 6 previously used for a claimant’s pain testimony. Harmon, 211 F.3d at 1178-79. Specifically, 7 the Court stated,

8 Requiring the ALJs to specify any factors discrediting a claimant at the 9 first opportunity helps to improve the performance of the ALJs by 10 discouraging them from reaching a conclusion first, and then attempting to 11 justify it by ignoring competent evidence. And the rule of crediting such 12 testimony ensures that deserving claimants will receive benefits as soon as 13 possible.

14 Certainly there may exist valid grounds on which to discredit a claimant’s 15 pain testimony. But if grounds for such a finding exist, it is both reasonable 16 and desirable to require the ALJ to articulate them in the original decision.

17 Id. at 1179 (internal modifications of original quotation omitted).

18 Applying the credit-as-true rule, the Harmon Court further stated that if after crediting 19 Dr. Fox’s testimony as true the claimant would be entitled to benefits, then the Court should 20 remand for an award of benefit, “regardless of whether the ALJ might have articulated a 21 justification for rejecting Dr. Fox’s opinion.” Id.

22 Similarly, in Benecke v. Barnhart, 379 F.3d 587, 594 (9th Cir. 2004), the Ninth Circuit 23 stated, “Because the ALJ failed to provide legally sufficient reasons for rejecting Benecke’s 24 testimony and her treating physician’s opinions, we credit the evidence as true.” The Ninth 25 Circuit went on to say that once the evidence is credited as true, there would be no basis for 26 the ALJ to conclude the Plaintiff could perform sedentary work. Id. at 596. And specifically 27 the Ninth Circuit removed the option of the ALJ reconsidering the evidence stating, 28 “Allowing the [ALJ] to decide the issue again would create an unfair ‘heads we win; tails let’s play again’ system of disability benefits adjudication.” Id. at 595. Finally, the Ninth Circuit stated that the ALJ should not be allowed to reconsider the evidence, even with new

1 and additional vocational expert testimony crediting the further limitations of claimant, 2 because allowing reconsideration, would provide no incentive for the ALJ to fulfill his/her 3 duty to develop the record in the first instance. Id.<sup>1</sup>

4 In the face of this state of the law, the Government argues that “credit-as-true” as 5 applied by the Ninth Circuit violates the Social Security Regulations and Supreme Court case 6 law. Doc. 14, n. 5. In support of its position, Defendant points to examples of conflicting 7 rules. For example, in INS v. Ventura, 537 U.S. 12, 16 (2002), the Supreme Court held that 8 when a court reverses an administrative determination, “the proper course, except in rare 9 circumstances, is to remand to the agency for additional investigation or explanation.”
10 Although Plaintiff argues this holding applies in only immigration cases (Doc. 17 at 19), the 11 Ninth Circuit applies it in social security cases. See Benecke, 379 F.3d at 595.

12 Defendant goes on to cite Judge O’Scannlain’s dissent in Vasquez. See Vasquez v.
13 Astrue 572 F.3d 586 (2009). In his dissent, Judge O’Scannlain addresses the 14 Commissioner’s petition for rehearing en banc. In reviewing the Commissioner’s petition, 15 Judge O’Scannlain recounts that credit-as-true with respect to a claimant’s pain testimony 16 is inconsistent with 42 U.S.C. § 523(d)(5)(A) (claimant’s testimony alone cannot be basis for

18 <sup>1</sup> Although in the credit-as-true context of treating physician’s opinions or a 19 claimant’s subjective complaints of pain/symptoms the Court of Appeals has rejected 20 remanding a case for the ALJ to further explain an opinion, the Court of Appeals permits 21 such a result in evaluating a combination of impairments under step 3. See Marcia v.
22 Sullivan, 900 F.2d 172, 176-77 (9th Cir. 1990) (“We hold that, in determining whether a 23 claimant equals a listing under step three of the Secretary’s disability evaluation process, the 24 ALJ must explain adequately his evaluation of alternative tests and the combined effects of 25 the impairments. Applying this standard to the findings in this case, we find that the [ALJ’s] 26 statement that [Plaintiff] did not equal the listing was insufficient. ... We remand this case to 27 the Secretary for proper consideration of step three equivalence because he is in a better 28 position to evaluate the medical evidence. On remand, if the Secretary finds that [Plaintiff’s] impairment or combination of impairments equals a listing, the claimant is presumed to be disabled, and benefits should be awarded. If the Secretary determines that [Plaintiff’s] medical evidence is insufficient to raise a presumption of disability, he should consider the disability evaluation to steps four and five.”).

1 disability finding). 572 F.3d at 601-02. Judge O’Scannlain further notes that although 2 Ventura requires remand for additional investigation or explanation except in rare cases, and 3 accepting the Commissioner’s statistics as true, the way the Ninth Circuit applies credit-as-4 true causes what should be the “rare” case to be somewhat common. Id. at 601-602. Finally, 5 Judge O’Scannlain discusses without deciding that if the Ninth Circuit’s credit-as-true rule 6 is a de facto finding of disability, “then our circuit’s precedent is badly misaligned with that 7 of other circuits.” Id. at 602.

8 Defendant further argues that this Court should reject “credit-as-true” based on 9 Strauss and Parra. Specifically, Defendant argues under Strauss this Court cannot award 10 disability benefits based on ALJ errors. 635 F.3d at 1137. Further, Defendant relies on 11 Strauss’s holding that an award of benefits is appropriate only when the claimant is actually 12 disabled. Id. Defendant concludes that credit-as-true is effectively just a sanction against 13 the ALJ, which leads to a finding of disability, even when there is conflicting evidence in the 14 record; thus, such a rule conflicts with Strauss. Moreover, Defendant argues that credit-as-15 true usurps the ALJ’s designated statutory role as finder of fact. 42 U.S.C. § 405(b)(1); 16 Parra v. Astrue, 481 F.3d 742, 750 (9th Cir. 2007).

17 As Judge O’Scannlain noted, “at least one panel has explicitly held that the crediting-18 as-true rule is not mandatory. Connett v. Barnhart, 340 F.3d 871, 876 (9th Cir. 2003).”
19 Vasquez, 572 F.3d at 604 (O’Scannlain, J. dissenting). Conversely, he further notes that 20 Lester, Harmon, and Benecke all applied the bright line rule that improperly rejected 21 testimony will be credited as true as a matter of law. Id. at 603-04. Judge O’Scannlain then 22 concludes that although there are two lines of cases as to whether credit-as-true is 23 discretionary, he cannot ignore the circuit law of Lester, Harmon, and Benecke which make 24 credit-as-true mandatory. Id. at 605 (O’Scannlain, J. dissenting). The majority in Vasquez, 25 however, disagreed with Judge O’Scannlain about how to resolve this conflict. Specifically, 26 the majority stated:

27 Since Varney II, a split in authority has developed over whether [credit-as-28

true] is mandatory or discretionary in this Circuit. Compare, e.g., Lester v. Chater, 81 F.3d 821, 834 (9th Cir.1995) (holding that when an ALJ improperly rejects a claimant's testimony regarding his limitations, and the claimant would be disabled if his testimony were credited, the testimony must be credited as a matter of law); with Connett v. Barnhart, 340 F.3d 871, 876 (9th Cir.2003) (discussing the Circuit's conflicting case law and holding that the doctrine is not mandatory because the court has "some flexibility in applying the crediting as true theory" (internal quotation marks omitted)). It is not necessary for us to resolve the conflict at this time, however, because, unlike Varney II or Lester, here there are outstanding issues that must be resolved before a proper disability determination can be made. [Footnote omitted] See Varney II at 859 F.2d 1401 (declining to address whether the credit-as-true rule should be adopted in cases where a remand for further proceedings is required before a disability determination can be made); Lester, 81 F.3d at 834 (holding that the credit-as-true rule is mandatory, but only where the claimant would be disabled if his testimony were credited).

Id. at 593.

Thus, this Court must weigh Judge O'Scannlain's guidance that this Court must follow the binding circuit precedent of Lester, Harmon, and Benecke, against Defendant's argument that such precedent is inconsistent with Supreme Court case law, the Code of Federal Regulations, other Circuit Courts of Appeals, and precedent of this Circuit (namely Connett and Strauss). Further complicating this analysis is Vasquez's acknowledgment that credit-as-true may be discretionary in this Circuit — a position neither party to this case advocates.

As both the majority and dissent in Vasquez note, even when the Court applies credit-as-true, that does not end the inquiry of whether to remand for an award of benefits or for further proceedings. Id. at 593-94, 603 ("The crediting-as-true rule is related to the decision on whether to remand for award of benefits; however, they are separate inquiries.") (O'Scannlain, J. dissenting). Thus, the framework to decide this case seems to be as follows. First, assuming credit-as-true is mandatory, and after applying credit-as-true, determine whether to remand for an award of benefits or for further proceedings. Id. at 593. Second, if the remand is for further proceedings, that ends the inquiry on appeal; however, if the remand is for award of benefits: resolve the conflict of whether credit-as-true is mandatory or discretionary. Id. at 593. If credit-as-true is mandatory, that again ends the inquiry. If

1 credit-as-true is discretionary, third, determine whether the Court should discretionarily apply 2 credit-as-true (weighing factors including whether the claimant is of advanced age, whether 3 claimant had previously experienced severe delays in the application process, and whether 4 the claimant is having financial difficulties). Id. at 593-94; Benecke, 379 F.3d at 595.

5 This framework, which the Court will apply in this case, effectively rejects 6 Defendant's argument that this Court should refuse to apply credit-as-true, in any of its 7 forms, because it is inconsistent with all other law regarding social security benefits.
8 Defendant makes a powerful case in this regard. And the case becomes even more powerful 9 by the 2011 decision in Strauss. 635 F.3d at 1135, 1138 ("The ALJ's errors are relevant only 10 as they affect that analysis on the merits. A claimant is not entitled to benefits under the 11 statute unless the claimant is, in fact, disabled, no matter how egregious the ALJ's errors may 12 be."). However, Strauss clearly did not intend to overrule the cases on credit-as-true, 13 whatever they may mean, because the Court went on to state, "Here, the district court did not 14 undertake to determine whether Plaintiff is disabled within the meaning of the statute. The 15 court did not credit as true any evidence that the ALJ had improperly excluded or 16 discounted." Id. (emphasis added).

17 Thus, on one side, the Court agrees with Defendant that credit-as-true based solely on 18 the ALJ's failure to articulate with specificity the reasons for a decision, even when such 19 reasons exist in the record, appears to be a windfall to a potentially non-disabled person 20 based on ALJ error. Harmon, 211 F.3d at 1179 (applying credit-as-true and holding that the 21 district court must remand for an award of benefit, "regardless of whether the ALJ might 22 have articulated a justification for rejecting Dr. Fox's opinion."). On the other side, however, 23 this District Court is bound by Ninth Circuit precedent, all of which seems to recognize some 24 form of credit-as-true, and cannot simply declare it all overruled.<sup>2</sup>

25
26 <sup>2</sup> Conversely, another district court in this Circuit has applied Strauss as a reason to 27 remand for the ALJ to explain his decision. Barajas v. Astrue, 2011 WL 3607450, *6 28 (S.D.Ca. July 8, 2011) ("There may or may not be evidence in the record the ALJ can rely

1 Medical Evidence in this Case

2 Using the three step process the Court articulated above, this Court must first 3 determine, assuming credit-as-true is mandatory and after applying credit-as-true, whether 4 to remand for an award of benefits or for further proceedings. As stated above, in this case, 5 Defendant concedes that the ALJ did not give specific and legitimate reasons for not relying 6 on the testimony of Dr. DeJesus, Dr. Lanier, Nurse Henderson, or Dr. Mason. The medical 7 testimony of these four professionals is as follows.

8 Dr. DeJesus found [Plaintiff] could stand and/or walk for less than two hours 9 and sit for less than six hours in an eight-hour workday. Lifting was limited 10 to less than ten pounds, and even then only occasionally... with limitations in 11 reaching, handling, and fingering. ... Dr. DeJesus also noted [Plaintiff] utilized a motorized wheel chair to assist in ambulation due to poor balance and a risk of falling.

12 Doc. 17 at 4-5.

13 Teresa Lanier, M.D., Ph.D., ... assessed limitations [that] also relegated 14 [Plaintiff] to less than even sedentary work: standing and/or walking for less 15 than two hours an sitting for less than six hours in an eight-hour workday, and 16 lifting less than ten pounds...Dr. Lanier assessed pain at the moderately severe level ... resulting in constant interference with attention and concentration, leading to frequent interference in the ability to complete tasks in a timely manner.

17 Id. at 8.

18 [Nurse Practitioner] Henderson found [Plaintiff] could stand and/or walk less 19 than two hours and sit for less than six hours in an eight-hour workday, and lift 20 less than ten pounds.... [Plaintiff] required a motorized wheel chair to assist in ambulation, due to 'unable to walk steadily, fear of falling' ... . Ability to reach, handle, and finger were also limited.

21 Id. at 6-7.

22 The treating psychiatrist, Howard K. Mason. M.D. ... assessed severe 23 limitations ... in abilities to understand, carry out, and remember instructions; perform simple and repetitive tasks; perform complex and varied tasks;

24 on to render the required 'specific' and 'legitimate' reasons for disregarding these opinions; 25 regardless, the ALJ is in a better position to perform the task than this Court."). That court 26 further held, "In light of the ALJ's failure to articulate any basis for rejecting the conflicting 27 determinations of Doctors Craemer and Ahmed, the matter should be remanded to allow the 28 ALJ to explain his reasons for doing so." Id. (citing Strauss).

1 complete a normal workday/workweek without interruptions from 2 psychologically based symptoms; and to perform at a consistent pace without 3 an unreasonable number/length rest periods. [Plaintiff] also had moderately severe limitations ... in abilities to respond appropriately to supervision, co-workers, and customary work pressures.

4 Id. at 7-8.

5 Thus, at this point, this Court must decide whether, after “crediting-as-true” these 6 opinions, the only conclusion is that Plaintiff is disabled. As Plaintiff’s counsel notes, “At 7 step four, the ALJ concluded [Plaintiff] could return to past relevant work as a park aide and 8 teller..., which the vocational expert testified were jobs performed at the light exertional 9 level.” Id. at 12. The ALJ reached this conclusion presumably having not relied on the 10 above quoted doctor’s opinions. However, the undersigned, not being able to ask the 11 vocational expert questions, and not being the fact finder in social security cases, is in a 12 difficult position to know whether to reverse the ALJ’s conclusion that Plaintiff, “could 13 perform ‘a range of less than light work as defined in 20 CFR 404.1545(a)(1).’” Id. at 12.

14 The Ninth Circuit is split on whether remanding for further vocational expert opinion, 15 using the “credited” testimony is appropriate. Compare Harman, 211 F.3d at 1180 (“In cases 16 where the testimony of the vocational expert failed to address a claimant’s limitations as 17 established by improperly discredited evidence, we consistently have remanded for further 18 proceedings rather than payment of benefits.”) with Benecke, 379 F.3d at 595-96 19 (acknowledging a lack of vocational expert testimony with the improperly discredited 20 testimony, but holding, “Even without extensive [vocational expert] testimony, [Claimant’s] 21 entitlement to benefits is clear.”).

22 Here, the testimony of Dr. Mason, if credited, appears to make it unlikely that Plaintiff 23 can work. However, this Court is hesitant to reach this conclusion without confirmation from 24 a vocational expert that a person with such limitation could not work. Accordingly, this 25 Court finds that there are outstanding issues to be resolved, and will remand for further 26 proceedings.

Credit-as-true on remand

As the Court discussed above, the Court presumed for purposes of this Court's analysis that applying credit-as-true was mandatory. See Vasquez, 572 F.3d at 593 (declining to decide whether credit-as-true was mandatory when there were further issues to resolve on remand). The next inquiry is whether this Court must direct the ALJ to likewise "credit-as-true" the testimony that Defendant concedes the ALJ did not properly consider.<sup>3</sup>

Defendant argues, for all the reasons detailed above, that this Court cannot usurp the ALJ's fact finding role by directing the ALJ on remand to credit as true testimony that the ALJ has a variety of reasons to discredit.<sup>4</sup> Again, for the reasons discussed above, the Court does not feel at liberty to completely reject credit-as-true in this Circuit. Further, courts applying credit-as-true appear to carry those "credits" to the ALJ's decision, even when the case is remanded for further proceedings. See e.g. Vasquez, 572 F.3d at 598 (ordering the ALJ on remand to credit Vasquez's pain testimony). However, the concurrence in Vasquez stated that the majority was applying "credit-as-true" in the exercise of their discretion, and not mandatorily. Id. at 601 (Hawkins, J. concurring) ("we are free to exercise our discretion (but not required) to apply the credit-as-true rule in this case").

<sup>3</sup> A second prong of this inquiry, which Defendant did not address, is Plaintiff's claim that the ALJ improperly rejected Plaintiff's pain and symptom testimony. Thus, Plaintiff argues that this testimony, also, should be credited as true to establish that she is disabled, or alternatively be credited as true on remand.

<sup>4</sup> Specifically, Defendant seeks an order remanding as follows: "Upon remand, the Appeals Council will remand the case back to an administrative law judge (ALJ) to hold a de novo hearing and issue a new designation regarding Plaintiff's eligibility for disability insurance benefits. The Appeals Council will instruct the ALJ to evaluate all of the opinion evidence of record, including the opinions of Mildred DeJesus, M.D., Teresa Lanier, M.D., and Howard Mason, M.D., as well as the opinion of Lois Henderson, a nurse practitioner, and specify the weight assigned to each opinion. The Appeals Counsel will instruct the ALJ to craft a residual functional capacity that reflects the evaluation of the opinion evidence, and, if necessary, obtain testimony from a vocational expert to determine the effect of Plaintiff's limitations on her occupational base." Doc. 13-1 at 1-2.

1 So, the Court must determine whether credit-as-true is mandatory for the ALJ on 2 remand for further proceedings or discretionary. Taking guidance from the concurrence in 3 Vasquez, the Court finds whether to apply credit-as-true on remand is discretionary. Id.
4 Thus, the Court must consider the factors for when to credit-as-true on remand, including 5 whether Plaintiff is of an advanced age and whether Plaintiff has suffered a severe delay in 6 the application process. Beck v. Astrue, 2012 WL 1378691, *5 (D. Ariz. 2012) (citing cases 7 finding three year and seven year delays not extraordinary in social security cases). The 8 Court can also consider the need for the income. Benecke, 379 F.3d at 595.

9 In this case, Plaintiff recounts public policy reasons that this Court should apply 10 credit-as-true and remand for an award of benefits. Doc. 17 at 27-28. However, Plaintiff 11 makes no specific arguments about whether this Court should discretionarily apply credit-as-12 true on remand in this case. The Court notes that Plaintiff applied for benefits in January 13 2007, approximately five and one-half years ago.

14 On this record, the Court does not order the ALJ to credit any of the doctor's findings 15 or Plaintiff's pain testimony as true on remand. The ALJ should reconsider all evidence in 16 this case, pose the necessary questions to the vocational expert based on that evidence, and 17 make a new determination, de novo, regarding Plaintiff's entitlement to benefits.

18 Conclusion

19 For the foregoing reasons,

20 IT IS ORDERED that Defendant's motion to remand (Doc. 13) is granted; 21 accordingly, the decision of the ALJ is reversed and this case is remanded pursuant to 22 sentence four of 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) for the ALJ to consider all evidence in this case as 23 specified above; the Clerk of the Court shall enter judgment consistent with this Order.
